

Astrophysics, Relativity, Cosmology Seminar
TAPIR, California Institute of Technology

7 February 2025

Infrared emission lines in the dusty interstellar medium

Elijah Kane

PMA, California Institute of Technology, Pasadena, CA

Abstract

Infrared emission lines are powerful probes of the physical conditions within dust-obscured regions, such as protoplanetary disks, molecular clouds, and active galactic nuclei. In this talk I will describe the physics behind this line emission and show examples of how measurements of atomic and molecular lines have been used to help us understand the dusty ISM.